ARGUMENT

War, as we know it, is a gloomy place, filled with death at every step. It strips men of their names, their homes, and often their reason, reducing whole generations to statistics printed in the back of history books. However, there were certain soldiers who, with their outstanding bravery, made it so that blood would not be spilled. In this book, we will talk about some of those soldiers — people who went against their better judgment, against every instinct of self-preservation, just so they could save one more man.

From men like Bull Allen, who carried wounded soldiers on his back through machine-gun fire, to the Night Witches, a flying squadron comprised entirely of women who harassed the German lines in flimsy biplanes, you will meet those whose stories rarely fit inside a classroom. You will meet Alvin Cullum York, a reluctant conscientious objector who became one of the most decorated soldiers of the First World War. You will meet the crew of U-156, who surfaced to rescue survivors they had just torpedoed. You will meet the "White Death," the "unkillable soldier," B-17 escorts who flew into certain death to guard bombers, and even Inmate 4859 — a man whose heroism was denied by the very country he died for. Each of them teaches what was never taught in school: the dislike to kill — the heroes who changed the way the war went on, not by killing more, but by refusing to let others die alone.

This book will show that, even in a dark place such as the front lines, there can be light too. It is not written so that war could become a good place. It is written to show how humans should act, even when not in war. With that being said, the heroes we are going to talk about will not be just legends, and their history will not be just empty stories. Hopefully, you too will be able to see, at the end of this book, what it truly means to be human, from the two most deadly conflicts of the 20th century. This is why I chose to write about the heroes of war — what we have not learnt during history classes.

The great man
